The Rad Riders are a club in Dayglow dedicated to surfing the best waves of the post-War world. The surfing competitions and events they hold have become a moderate tourist attraction in the New California Republic's southern state of Dayglow.

Background

The origins of the Rad Riders stem from their founder, Dana Dieguito. Dieguito was a surfer from before the Great War, she spent much of her time riding the waves of San Diego while not working at her family's salvage company. She would become ghoulified while trying to survive in the irradiated city of San Diego, eventually linking up with her cousin Juan who met a similar fate. Many years passed and San Diego became Dayglow, Dieguito would eventually pick up her surfboard again in her free time. When an exodus of ghouls from Necropolis in 2162 made their way to the city, a small group began to form around Dieguito and her favorite pastime. Some of them were ghouls who had surfed before the war, but many others were looking for something fun to do when not scavenging the ruins of Dayglow and West Tek. She would start teaching anyone genuinely curious about surfing, and by 2281 there were 19 members of the group now known as the Rad Riders.

In 2281, the surfing events held by the Rad Riders have become widely known across the southern territories of the New California Republic. Their annual "Radungadunga" competition draws tourists from as far as the Boneyard, and rumors persist that Aaron Kimball attended one while off-duty as a soldier in the NCR military before becoming president.

Recruitment

With only those resistant to radiation being able to surf the radioactive waves of Dayglow, new members are not frequently brought into the Rad Riders. Ghouls are the most common race in the club, however a few super mutants have also been members of its ranks. The club does not have any restrictions on humans joining, however the danger posed to them by radiation means that only one human has ever passed their initiation.
